

What is Foodle?

Where can the serious foodie find fresh images and information about top-caliber restaurants around the globe? Traditional media like TV shows and magazines provide staged experiences and carefully manicured dishes crafted only for the camera, not for actual customers. Social-media sites like Instagram provide genuine snapshots of restaurant meals, but lack important details and are not set up for useful searching. Booking sites give specific info and user reviews, but such subjective feedback with minimal sourcing can be misleading, and business influences may cause intriguing new eateries to be ignored.

Introducing Foodle – a dynamic new social-media platform aiming to provide sophisticated diners with a useful, reliable, and enjoyable information source focused on excellent eateries worldwide, from metropolitan restaurants with multiple Michelin stars to authentic local dining destinations found far off the beaten path. As a portal for users to share photos and reviews of their restaurant experiences as well as a source for dependable gastronomy articles by noted international epicures, Foodle fills a niche for gourmets seeking exquisite flavors and settings at a variety of price ranges.

Foodle users can examine the shared background of anyone who posts food photos and restaurant evaluations, creating a global network of trustworthy culinary connoisseurs to guide each other through the ever-changing international fine-dining scene. Advanced search features allow Foodle users to discover eateries based on diverse criteria ranging from location to specialties, refining their ability to peruse unbiased critiques and food photos posted by other knowledgeable diners who are served as everyday customers.

Diners can use Foodle on iPhone, Android as a web app and through the website at Foodle.pro
